

Advocates' Institute

What is it?

The Advocates' Institute forms the foundation of NCCADV's training program. Intended for new advocates, and those that feel they need a refresher, the Institute is designed to build skills and competencies around the dynamics of domestic violence and best practices in serving survivors of all ages and identities. The Institute also provides a brief introduction to prevention of domestic violence, so advocates are prepared to seek out further training in that area. The Institute curriculum is regularly updated to include the newest information and cutting edge practices and was completely revamped for 2018!

The overarching goal of the Institute is to increase the quality of services provided to survivors across the state. Helping advocates increase their skills results in higher confidence and increased creativity. Supporting organizations in their work can increase the longevity of staff tenure and the quality of workplace experiences.

NCCADV uses the Advocates' Institute as an important vehicle to convey its priorities and beliefs about the best way to provide services to survivors of domestic violence regardless of their identities or experiences.

January 22 nd – 26 th	June 25 th – 29 th	October 1 st – 5 th

Do I have to attend all 5 days?

Yes, we ask that participants attend the entire Institute. Exceptions can be made if a participant has attended an NCCADV training covering the given topic(s) in the previous year. For example, if a participant attended the Domestic Violence Basics training in the previous month, they may be exempt from the first day of the Advocates' Institute. To discuss possible exceptions, please contact Carolina Alzuru, NCCADV's Director of Training, at calzuru@nccadv.org or 919-956-9124 x 204.

Where is it?

Each 5-day Advocates' Institute takes place at a single location in the Triangle. There may be some travel scholarships available for those traveling longer distances. For questions about scholarships, please contact Carolina Alzuru, NCCADV's Director of Training, at calzuru@nccadv.org or 919-956-9124 x 204.

Who should attend the Advocates' Institute?

The Advocates' Institute is designed and structured to train victim/survivor advocates at community-based domestic violence programs, colleges and universities, and other organizations. Advocates and their role are at the center of the Institute. If you're interested in domestic violence training, but are not a victim/survivor advocate, check out NCCADV's training calendar for other training options.

Why should I attend the Advocates' Institute?

NCCADV is North Carolina's leading trainer on domestic violence. NCCADV provides trainings on a variety of topics to domestic violence service providers, colleges/universities, and allied professionals including law enforcement agencies, courts, faith based organizations, and business leaders. The purpose of NCCADV's trainings is to improve the quality of services to domestic violence survivors, improve the capacity to engage in primary prevention, and to ensure consistency with services across the state.

The North Carolina Council for Women (CFW) requires that all direct service providers at Domestic Violence Organizations in the state receive a minimum of 20 hours of subject specific training prior to providing any services for clients. CFW also requires all hotline staff and volunteers to receive a minimum of 20 hours of training on specific duties. Additionally, all employees and volunteers providing direct services should receive 20 hours of training annually. NCCADV's Advocates' Institute gives participants a total of 30 training hours, which is sufficient to cover a year's worth of required training hours for each training participant.

How do I get certified?

NCCADV offers an optional certification through the Advocates' Institute. In order to receive certification, participants must attend all 5 days of the Institute and take a certification test. The test consists of a combination of multiple choice, fill-in-the-blank, and short answer questions. The certification test costs $100.

What are the benefits of certification?

- Recognition of specialized domestic violence victim service training for the individual advocate and the organization that they represent
- Recognition of professional skills and competence in domestic violence response for the individual advocate and the organization that they represent
- Opportunity to network with advocates from across the state
- Commitment to professional development with an increased value to current and future employers

How much does it cost?

Attendance at NCCADV's Advocates' Institute is free for members and costs $250 for non-members. For information on how to become an NCCADV member, visit our website. The optional certification test costs $100 for all participants, regardless of membership.
